North Dakota Farmer's Union Supports Congressional Oversight of Trade Tariffs

The Trade Review Act of 2025 would limit presidential power to impose tariffs.

North Dakota Farmers Union announced its support today of bipartisan legislation in the U.S. Senate that would limit the power of the president to implement trade tariffs without congressional approval. The Trump Administration's widespread implementation of tariffs last week has already caused a significant drop in the price of several crops.

"North Dakota will be hardest hit by these tariffs," said North Dakota Farmers Union President Mark Watne. "North Dakota farmers and ranchers rely heavily on strong export markets and are especially vulnerable to retaliatory tariffs."

If enacted, The Trade Review Act of 2025 would restore congressional authority over tariffs as outlined in Article 1, Section 8 of the Constitution by placing limits on a president's power to impose tariffs. It would require the president to notify Congress of tariff action within 48 hours, which then gives Congress 60 days to pass a joint resolution of approval. If disapproved, the tariff would end.

Watne said restoring Congress's authority over tariffs would promote more orderly and thoughtful trade policies. "This administration's approach to tariffs has created a huge amount of confusion and uncertainty. We need Congress to step up and exercise its constitutional authority."

The long-term damage done to relationships with trading partners is of equal concern to farmers, Watne said. "If we don't take a more deliberate approach to our trade relationships, we will no longer be a trusted partner and buyers will go elsewhere. That means farmers will get paid less over longer periods of time for the products we export."

Livestock Water Quality Likely to be Impacted by Drought

An NDSU Extension agent demonstrates how to use a TDS meter to screen a livestock water source.

Many ranchers in the region still depend on surface water sources, such as dugouts and stock dams, to provide water for grazing livestock. Access to good-quality water will continue to be a challenge for ranchers in North Dakota this spring, according to Miranda Meehan, North Dakota State University Extension livestock environmental stewardship specialist.

"Due to drought conditions and low spring runoff, many livestock water sources have either dried up or may be toxic to livestock," says Meehan.

Water quality impacts cattle intake and weight gain. Studies have reported improved gains by as much as onequarter of a pound per day in yearlings and one-third of a pound per day in calves drinking good-quality water.

When surface waters become low, the mineral component of the water becomes more concentrated because minerals do not evaporate with the water. Of particular concern are increased concentrations of total dissolved solids (TDS) and sulfates, which can be toxic to livestock. For most classes of grazing livestock, the TDS in the water should be less than 5,000 parts per million (ppm).

Sulfate is part of the TDS. The recommended concentration should be less than 500 ppm for calves and less than 1,000 ppm for adult cattle. High levels of sulfate can reduce copper availability in the diet. Elevated levels of sulfates may cause loose stool, whereas very high levels of sulfate can induce central nervous system problems.

Water quality screenings conducted by NDSU Extension agents in the fall of 2024 found many water sources to have potentially toxic levels of sulfates, especially in western North Dakota.

In preparation for the upcoming grazing season, Meehan encourages monitoring water quality and evaluating alternative water options. She recommends a couple of tools to aid in monitoring water quality: a handheld TDS meter and sulfate test strips. Both these tools are affordable and easy to use. If the screening indicates the TDS is greater than 4,500 ppm and/or sulfates are greater than 800 ppm, submit a sample to a lab for additional analysis.

If you have encountered water quality issues in the past, Meehan says to evaluate and consider developing an alternative water source.

"Installing a water development plan can help ensure that livestock can access good-quality water throughout the grazing season and increase a ranch's drought resilience," says Meehan.

For more information on livestock water quality, contact your local NDSU Extension office or visit https://www.ndsu.edu/agriculture/ag-hub/ag-topics/livestock/water.

First District Health Unit Offers Program to Reduce Falls in Older Adults

One in four older adults has a fall each year according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) and North Dakota averages 56 deaths per 100,000 in death related falls. But the good news, according to Melissa Burud, RN BSN, is that falls are not a normal part of aging and can be prevented.

The Stepping On program, offered in Mohall by First District Health Unit, has been researched and proven to reduce falls by 31%. The weekly workshop will start on Tuesday, May 27th at the Mohall Senior Center from 9:00-11:00 and will go through Tuesday, July 8th.

In just 7 weekly, 2-hour sessions, Stepping On gives participants strategies for avoiding falls including balance and strength exercises, home safety check suggestions, medication review, and more. Guest experts including a physical therapist and pharmacist and others visit over the course of the seven sessions providing falls prevention information and strategies for avoiding a fall. The workshop is designed specifically for people who age 60 or older OR individuals who have fallen and have a fear of falling. Participants can expect to leave with more strength, better balance, and a feeling of confidence and independence.

To register for Stepping On, contact Stacey Schoemer at 701-377-2316 or Melissa Burud at 701-385-4328. Participants must pre-register!
