Reflection: Carrying the Banner

Young

by Sarah Dixon Young

I love that movie from the nineties called, "Newsies."

Homeless, streetsmart boys find employment selling newspapers, and they often do it by embellishing the headlines. Their theme is that they are "carrying the banner."

I thought of the movie, and its catchy song, this week at backyard Bible club. The kids in my neighborhood were full of news, complete with embellished headlines and dance steps.

Like the movie portrays, I found that the most sensational headlines were the sad ones: Two Boys Burned by

Artillery Shell

Friend's Mom Hit by Car

Free Lunch Program Ends, Leaving August Hungry

Mom leaves for Drug Treatment in California

The children are full of news, and mostly, they are looking for a worldview where all the pieces fit together instead of being left holding a broken puzzle.

I took the echoes of their headlines to my Bible reading the next morning. I am in the genealogies of 2 Chronicles and the book of Ezekiel. All Scripture is Godbreathed, but I am trying to read on fast-forward because Chronicles and Ezekiels are not really my

But, as usually happens with God's word, something stopped me. It was a little headline, buried in the backpages of the Philistine's newspaper: "And the Philistines stripped King Saul and took his head and his armor, and sent messengers throughout the land of the Philistines to carry the good news to their idols and to the people."

Chronicles is telling the tragic story of the

Reflection: I remember #1

I remember when we could trust that if a person said they were Christian, it was most likely the truth.

Then along came people like Marjoe Gortner, Jim and Tammy Fay Bakker.

I was not raised in the kind of church that spawned 4-year old evangelists (like Gortner) or fire and brimstone preachers like the Bakkers - we used to call them "turn or burn" preachers. When I encountered folks like that I often felt anger because even though they obviously didn't really believe the things they preached, like Gortner admitted in a documentary in the early 1970's - there were poor, unsuspecting believers who did believe them and gave away what little they had to these televangelistthieves.

Gortner spoke at UND when I was attending college there. He spoke about how he and his family had started a ministry where he was the golden-haired, cherubic child-evangelist who ended up having a great number of followers preaching and taking home basketfulls of cash after each service.

He said they would dump the money onto the bed at whatever motel or hotel they were staying in and Gortner said he would roll around on the bills as they made fun of the poor slobs who gave them their pathetic crumpled up dollars.

At the time I really didn't have much of a relationship with God, but I knew right from wrong.

And in my opinion, what they did was wrong. Now here he was working a different kind of circuit - speaking at colleges and venues around the country - debunking the things he had earlier used to bilk people out of their hard-earned dollars.

The 1970's version of Gortner no longer claimed to be a Christian, in fact, his message was that all of it was fake and anyone who believed it was naive or stupid or simple-minded.

I remember leaving that lecture and feeling sick to my stomach.

Not because I had believed in that kind of message - but because of the sweet simple folks who maybe did believe him. He fooled them and they had hung their hopes and faith on the words of a fake.

So what if he didn't really believe what he said?

They did. What a good lesson that was for the 18-year-

I am not responsible for what someone else says or does.

I am responsible for myself.

That experience started when I reach the end,
