Michael Maher, left, and Franklin Moran talk outside the Salvation Army on Jan. 17 in downtown Fargo. They are currently homeless, but Maher said he has a place he can stay.

HOMELESS

from the Fargo-Moorhead Coalition to End Homelessness, the Missouri Slope United Way Center for Opportunity, Burleigh County Public Health and Ministry on the Margins all nonprofits advocating for more state and federal housing assistance.

Every organization told lawmakers the need for safe and affordable housing is rising in North Dakota and at the same time, between both the state and the federal government, they noted they've seen fewer public dollars funneled into affordable housing and homelessness services compared to recent years. Jena Gullo of the Missouri Slope Area United Way Center for Opportunity said in some areas, the issue might be easier to address than one might think.

She said the fact that about 12% of her clients are chronically homeless, meaning they have been homeless for a year or more, is "a good thing."

"That means this (homelessness) is solvable," she said. "With the right services and support coming together, we can actually exit people to permanent housing and reduce recidivism rates.'

Longtime Valley City lawmaker dies

BY MICHAEL ACHTERLING North Dakota Monitor

VALLEY CITY, N.D. Former North Dakota lawmaker Larry Robinson died

Wednesday, Sept. 3, according to a statement from Valley City State University, which Robinson worked to support for nearly 50 years.

Robinson, 75, a Democrat, served in the North Dakota Senate from 1989 to 2020.

Valley City State University President Alan LaFave called Robinson an "ardent supporter of higher education in North Dakota."

Robinson retired in 2024 as executive director of university advancement at Vallev City State. He began working for the universitv in 1975 as director of the Memorial Student Center and Student Activities and later became the first director of the university's foundation. In the Legislature, Robinson served on the interim Higher Education Committee for several years. He was also a longtime member of the Senate Appropriations Committee, in addition to other committees.

LaFave said Robinson was instrumental in securing state funding for the Rhoades Science Center renovation in 2013 and the Center for the Arts, which opened in 2022 and was recently renamed the Larry J. Robinson Center for the Arts.

"His legacy will live on in the scholarships he helped create, the students whose lives he touched, and the vibrant facilities that stand as a testament to his work," LaFave said in a statement.

Sen. Kyle Davison R-Fargo, recognized Robinson at the start of a legislative committee meeting on Thursday. Sen. Kathy Hogan,

D-Fargo, a member of the committee, said Robinson could also be known as "Mr. Valley City" for his contributions to the university and representing the area in the Legislature for more than three decades

"He was such a gentleman," Hogan said. "He was classy, respectful, thoughtful, but also very, very compassionate and committed to education, all education, but particularly in Valley City.'

He was nonpartisan, and lawmakers wanted him on their committees because they knew they would be better off with his input, sahe said.

Sen. Dick Dever, R-Bismarck, also a member of the committee, remembered that in the session after Robinson lost his reelection bid in 2020, he still showed up at the Capitol and brought donuts for his former colleagues.

In a statement, Gov. Kelly Armstrong called Robinson a "true statesman of the Senate."

"His positive impact on VCSU and our higher education system will benefit students and our state for generations to come," said Armstrong, who served in the state Senate with Robinson from 2013 to 2018.
