New research shows 2025 tourism dip in North Dakota with early signs of momentum for 2026

BISMARCK – North Dakota's latest Tourism economic impact report, prepared by Tourism Economics, shows the state's visitor economy dipped in 2025 amid a significant decline in Canadian travel. While overall visitation and spending saw decreases compared with 2024, the findings highlight the continued strength of the domestic travel market, and independent data points to early signs of momentum heading into 2026.

According to the research, North Dakota welcomed 25.6 million visitors in 2025, a 2.6% decrease from the previous year. Domestic travelers continued to make up most of the market, accounting for 88.4% of total visitation. International volumes declined sharply by reduced Canadian travel following a 23.9% drop in border crossings reported in the state's annual travel update.

Visitor spending reached $3.4 billion in 2025, down 1.2% from 2024. On average, visitors spent $9.2 million per day in the state, with per-visitor spending averaging $132.

Tourism generated $5.6 billion in total economic impact and produced $304.4 million in state and local taxes. Without those visitor-generated revenues, each North Dakota household would need to pay an additional $919 in taxes annually. Tourism also sustained 6.5% of all jobs statewide, representing one in every 15 jobs.

"Destinations with significant international exposure, especially to Canada, welcomed fewer international visitors during increased trade tensions between the countries," said Tourism Economics Economist Christian Fonseca. "However, demand for domestic leisure travel supported growth in total U.S. visitation."
